The Honorable Gina McCarthy
Administrator
U.S. Environmental Protection Agency
1200 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, D.C. 20460

Dear Administrator McCarthy:

According to several media reports, the drinking water in the Village of Hoosick Falls, New York, was contaminated by the chemical Perfluorooctanoic acid, commonly known as PFOA.¹ This chemical has been linked to various types of cancer and other serious medical conditions.² Documents show Environmental Protection Agency officials were aware of PFOA contamination in the Hoosick Falls water supply in December 2014, and that the agency failed to take action until almost one year later.³

In the summer of 2014, residents of Hoosick Falls became concerned about a spike in local cases of cancer and made inquiries to county and state government officials about the safety of the public drinking water.⁴ Government officials were non-responsive, so a group of citizens conducted tests and found PFOA levels in the water exceeded EPA's provisional health advisory level of 400 parts per trillion for short-term exposure.⁵ The village subsequently conducted its own tests in November 2014 and found similarly elevated levels of PFOA.⁶

EPA became aware of the problem when an EPA official communicated with New York State Department of Health officials about tests that found high PFOA levels in the Hoosick Falls water system in December 2014.⁷ The problem was again brought to EPA's attention later that month, when a Hoosick Falls company sent a letter directly to EPA headquarters in Washington, D.C. that disclosed tests that detected PFOA at levels exceeding EPA guidelines in the public drinking water supplies located near their facilities.⁸

EPA Region 2 Administrator Judith Enck, however, said she was first notified about the dangerous levels of PFOA in the Hoosick Falls water supply in November 2015, when a local attorney brought the issue to her attention.⁹ Only then did the agency intervene and notify residents of the problem in a letter sent to the village, which advised citizens to refrain from using the water for cooking and urged the village to provide an alternative drinking water source.¹⁰ Documents and public statements about the crisis in Hoosick Falls show EPA knew that the village water supply was contaminated in December 2014, but did not take any action until nearly one year later, in November 2015. The fact that EPA staff at the agency's headquarters in Washington, D.C. knew or should have known about the problem, and failed to communicate with their counterparts in region 2, raises serious questions, considering the health and safety of the residents of Hoosick Falls was at stake.

Recently, EPA established a new lifetime health advisory for PFOA and PFOS at 70 parts per trillion and reiterated the health risks associated with the chemical.¹¹ Since EPA issued this advisory, residents of Hoosick Falls have undergone blood testing for PFOA.¹² The results of these tests found that the average PFOA levels for residents of Hoosick are five times higher than the national average and many residents found their PFOA levels exceed the limit set by EPA.¹³ Concerns remain over whether these results could have been avoided or mitigated if residents had earlier understood the risk of PFOA in drinking water.

To help the Committee understand how and why EPA failed to remediate the health crisis in Hoosick Falls as soon as possible, please provide all documents and communications to or from any EPA employee referring or relating to Hoosick Falls, PFOA, and/or Perfluorooctanoic acid, since May 1, 2014.

Please provide these records as soon as possible, but no later than by 5:00 p.m. on July 20, 2016.

The Committee on Oversight and Government Reform is the principal oversight committee of the House of Representatives and has broad authority to investigate "any matter" at "any time" under House Rule X.
